ABSTRACT

Gender is social culture construction about the relation women and men and it becomes the definition of male and female which is formed by society (mankind). This gender is not natural but only the social attribute to sex. Since gender is a cultural construction and it does not have any gaps or differences it may not become a problem. However, the fact shows that it has problems because there are gaps in it, that is the gaps between male and female. In writing this thesis the writer uses a qualitative method. The data are in the form of soft data, or qualitative description.

The main purpose of this research this topic is to explore more about gender inequalities which happen to Jane Eyre in Charlotte Bronte in terms of marginalized, subordinate, stereotype, violence, and double burden. The result of the analysis shows that gender inequalities can occur in the term of marginalized, subordinate, stereotype, violence, and double burden.
